Luminous efficacy is a measure of how well a light source produces visible light. It is the ratio of luminous flux to power, measured in lumens per watt in the International System of Units (SI). Depending on context, the power can be either the radiant flux of the source's output, or it can be the total power (electric power, chemical energy, or others) consumed by the source.

A set of primary colors is, most tangibly, a set of real colorants or colored lights that can be combined in varying amounts to produce a gamut of colors. This is the essential method used in applications that are intended to elicit the perception of diverse sets of color, e.g. electronic displays, color printing, and paintings.

Spectral sensitivity. At its very origin, the signal driving physiological and behavioral light responses (ipRGC firing) is defined by the combined influence of multiple photoreceptive processes: the melanopsin-driven phototransduction mechanism within the ipRGC itself, and remote photoreception in rods and cones (Figure 1B). Each of these mechanisms of light detection has a distinct spectral ...
